Part B — In-Class Activity

Activity 1 — Living with Human Consciousness

Fill the priority (1/2/3) and the outcome for each.

Component	Priority (1/2/3)	Outcome
Right understanding (in the self)	1	Mutual happiness and prosperity
Relationship (with human beings)	2	Mutual happiness
Physical facility (with rest of nature)	3	Prosperity

Activity 2 — Our Program

Write the four levels at which we are to understand and live in harmony, and the two steps for working with any proposal.

Four levels: human being, family, society, nature/existence.

Two steps: 1. Understand harmony at that level. 2. Live in harmony at that level.

Activity 3 — Harmony at One Level vs Another

Take an example where ensuring harmony at one level seems to disturb another (e.g. time for right understanding vs family). How would working for harmony — not managing — help at both?

Example: Spending time for self-reflection (right understanding) may seem to reduce time with family. Working for harmony means understanding that my own clarity and happiness directly improve my interactions with family; I can involve family in my practice or schedule time that respects both. This way, both levels are fulfilled without conflict, because harmony at one level supports harmony at the other.

Activity 4 — Family or Society?

Where would you place each, and why (feeling of relationship vs common goal)? In-laws, neighbours, your workplace/organisation.

In-laws → Family (feeling of relationship, based on mutual affection and care).

Neighbours → Society (common goal of living peacefully in a community, not necessarily a deep relationship).

Your workplace/organisation → Society (common goal of work and productivity, though relationships may develop, the primary bond is a shared purpose).

Part C — Long-Answer Questions

Q1. Describe the method to fulfil the basic human aspirations through understanding and living in harmony at all four levels of being.

The method involves first understanding the harmony inherent in the four levels of being: individual (self), family, society, and nature/existence. At the individual level, one must achieve harmony within the self by aligning thoughts, desires, and actions with right understanding. In the family, harmony is cultivated through mutual respect, trust, and fulfilling responsibilities. At the societal level, harmony is achieved by ensuring justice, peace, and collective well-being. Finally, at the level of nature, harmony means living in a sustainable and respectful relationship with the environment. By consciously practicing right understanding and living in accordance with this harmony at each level, basic human aspirations for happiness, peace, and fulfillment are naturally realized.

Q2. Explain “Our Program” — the two-fold effort of understanding harmony and living in harmony — and the process by which proposals are checked.

“Our Program” consists of two simultaneous efforts: first, understanding harmony at all four levels of being (self, family, society, nature), and second, living in accordance with that harmony in daily life. The process of checking proposals involves verifying them against one's own natural acceptance (what feels inherently right) and through experiential validation. A proposal is considered correct if it leads to mutual fulfillment and harmony at all levels, and if it is universally applicable. This checking is done through self-reflection, dialogue, and practical experimentation, ensuring that the proposal does not create conflict or contradiction at any level.

Q3. If ensuring harmony at one level seems to disturb another, how can a program for continuity of happiness be made? Explain how working for harmony at the individual level helps at the other levels.

If ensuring harmony at one level appears to disturb another, the program for continuity of happiness must be re-evaluated by examining the root cause of the conflict. True harmony at all levels is mutually reinforcing, not contradictory. The solution lies in deepening one's understanding of harmony, so that actions at one level are aligned with the well-being of all other levels. Working for harmony at the individual level is foundational because a person with inner harmony (right understanding, clarity, and self-regulation) naturally acts in ways that promote harmony in the family, society, and nature. For example, an individual who is content and peaceful will treat family members with respect, contribute positively to society, and use natural resources responsibly. Thus, individual harmony serves as the basis for extending harmony outward, ensuring that efforts at one level support rather than disturb others.
