Part B — In-Class Activity

Activity 1 — Categorise by Fulfilment

List a few desires and tick what is needed to fulfil each.

Desire / want	Right understanding	Relationship (right feeling)	Physical facility
Money			✓
Good friends		✓
Peace of mind	✓
Respect from others	✓	✓
Healthy food			✓

Activity 2 — Need of the Self (I) or the Body?

For each, mark the primary need and give the reason.

Desire	Need of Self (I) / Need of Body	Why
Food	Need of Body	It is required for the physical survival and functioning of the body.
House	Need of Body	It provides shelter and protection from the elements, fulfilling a bodily need.
Respect	Need of Self (I)	It is a feeling of being valued, which relates to the Self, not the body.
Knowledge	Need of Self (I)	It is about understanding and clarity, which belongs to the Self (I).

Activity 2 (follow-up): Roughly, what % of your desires are needs of the Self, and what % of your effort goes to physical facility?

> Approximately 80% of my desires are needs of the Self (I), but about 70% of my effort goes to physical facility.

Activity 3 — Source of Motivation

Categorise a few desires by source, and estimate the percentages.

Desire	Preconditioning / Sensation / Natural Acceptance	Enslaved or Self-organised?
Wanting a luxury car	Preconditioning	Enslaved
Eating tasty junk food	Sensation	Enslaved
Helping a friend in need	Natural Acceptance	Self-organised

Activity 4 — Time & Effort Audit

Roughly how many hours a day do you spend on each? (right understanding, relationship, physical facility/body)

Right understanding: 1 hour
Relationship: 3 hours
Physical facility/body: 8 hours

Part C — Long-Answer Questions

Q1. A list of desires, thoughts and expectations can be categorised in three different ways. Describe these three categorisations.

The three categorisations are: 1) Necessary and unnecessary — desires that are essential for harmony vs. those that are wasteful or harmful. 2) Fulfillable and unfulfillable — desires that can be satisfied within natural limits vs. those that are infinite or impossible to satisfy. 3) For the Self (I) and for the Body — desires related to the need for happiness, trust, and respect (Self) vs. desires for physical comfort, food, and shelter (Body).

Q2. Distinguish between the need of the Self (I) and the need of the Body, with examples, and state the conclusion this exercise leads to.

The need of the Self (I) is qualitative, continuous, and non-material — e.g., happiness, trust, respect, love. The need of the Body is quantitative, temporary, and material — e.g., food, clothing, shelter, health. The conclusion is that the Self and Body are different in their needs; fulfilling only bodily needs does not ensure happiness, while fulfilling the needs of the Self leads to lasting satisfaction and harmony.

Q3. Differentiate preconditioning, sensation and natural acceptance as sources of motivation, and explain which leads to self-organisation and which to enslavement.

Preconditioning is motivation based on beliefs, habits, and conditioning from society, family, or culture — it often leads to enslavement because it is not based on one's own natural acceptance. Sensation is motivation driven by physical pleasure or pain — it also leads to enslavement as it is temporary and keeps one chasing external stimuli. Natural acceptance is motivation arising from one's innate, unchanging sense of right and wrong, harmony, and co-existence — it leads to self-organisation because it aligns with one's true nature and promotes sustainable happiness and order.
